Bryant Randall Clark (M7A5) was born on January 30, 1902 in Georgetown, Idaho. He graduated from Brigham Young University with a B.S. in science, and from the University of Utah with a Master's degree in geophysics. His home was in Colonia Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico. For sixteen years he was the Superintendent of the Juarez Stake Academy during which time he taught classes regularly and was a dearly loved professor. After retirement, he became a successful fruit grower and wrote and published a novel, Rains in Meadow Valley, based on life in an isolated community of northern Mexico. He also compiled and published his Mother's history, That You Might Know her Better, the Life of Alice Randall Clark . His testimony remained ever strong. A sudden heart attach took his life in Salt Lake City, Utah, on Friday the 13th of November, 1981. He was buried alongside an infant son in Charleston, Utah. His wife, Reta, age 90 years, resides in their home in Mexico. Bryant taught his children to be grateful for their pioneer heritage.
